/*

think about you are going to a coffee shop and there's 5 people ahead of you imagine the barista only take your order when he completed the first customer's order you can imagine how slow the process will be to get to you

That is consider as blocking.

none-blocking is the barista will take everyones order and server it up depending how fast and easy the drink is

That is none-blocking

*/

function doSomething(num1, num2) { setTimeout(() => { console.log("do this 1 second later"); }, 1000); function doMath() { return num1 + num2; } return doMath(); }

function sayHello() { return "hello!"; }

doSomething(1, 2); sayHello();